For the following format specifiers, PLEASE FILL OUT COMPLETE INFORMATION. It will not be sufficient to copy and paste information you find on the internet. For your own success in this lesson you should articulate your understanding of how each of these specifiers work.

| | |
|---|---|
| %f | When do you use it?Float is for when you want to have an output for numbersHow does it work?It works by allowing you to have a certain amount of numbers with a certain amount of decimalsProvide examples:System.out.printf("%10.2f", "235.234") |
| %d | When do you use it?For decimals when you want to display an number with a base 10 formatHow does it work?Enter the amount of numbers you wantProvide examples:System.out.printf("%10.5d", "235.352354" |
| %s | When do you use it?You use it when you know that you will be using characters or string data within you outputHow does it work?It allows you to have a certain amount of characters in your outputProvide examples:System.out.printf("%10s ", "test") |